M'ADOO PROPOSES WATERWAY PLAN

Presents Solution for 50-Year
Rail-Water Quarrel
by Unity.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—Solution of the rail-water controversy—a contest in interstate trade of more than 30 years standing—developing transportation on the waterways and coordinating and articulating them with a unified railway system, is proposed by W. G. McAdoo, in the chapter of his annual report as director-general of railroads, devoted to inland waterways, made public today.

This is possible with the railroads under federal control, Mr. McAdoo asserts. "I doubt if any of our rivers or canals will become active factors of transportation if the railroads are turned back to private control. The old methods of railway competition with the waterways doubtless will be revived and the waterways experiment may not be able to survive that competition."

Benefits of government control of traffic on the various inland waterways are reviewed by the report. These waterways include the Mississippi, the Ohio and the Intracoastal waterways.

The war worked against freight service on the Mississippi between New Orleans and St. Louis. Operations from the institution of the service Sept. 28 to the latter part of November were estimated as resulting in a loss of more than $1,500.

Although sufficient equipment for the trade was found on the Intracoastal waterways between Philadelphia and New York, the report states there is a lack of co-operation between shipper and vessel owner.

Universal Army
Training Urged
By Congressmen

Representative Julius Kahn, California, ranking Republican member of the house committee on military affairs, who will probably be chairman of the committee in the next congress and thus have much to do with shaping the military policy of the country after the demobilization, said in a speech at the Waldorf-Astoria recently he favored universal training of young men of 18 to 20 years of age and a standing army of 100,000 in addition to the regular army.

Speaking at the dinner of the National Garment Retailers' association, Mr. Kahn warned against disarmament and told his hearers he was not one of those who believed the millennium had come.

"Man is a fighting animal," said Mr. Kahn. "He cannot help it, for he was born that way. Set two infants on one another and they will fight. The minute the other leaves it he crawls over and tries to take it from the possessor. In the end, the toy remains in the hands of the stronger. The same is true of the wild beasts of the forest and the plain. The survival of the fittest seems to be the result nature aims at, and this rule has dominated the world as long as history has been recorded."

After recounting the lessons he said he had learned from the world war, Mr. Kahn said that in his opinion, "it would be the height of folly to neglect our own preparations for possible wars of the future, and the defense of our rights as a vigorous, independent and aggressive nation."

Discussing problems of reconstruction, Mr. Kahn warned against a continuance of the policy of paternalism he saw exemplified in the policy of government control of utilities and urged a strong merchant marine.

Now he is praying.
While his mother was away on a visit Johnny didn't say his prayers. Upon his mother's return there was a reckoning.

"Why didn't you say your prayers, Johnny?"
"Well, you see, it was this way, ma. I forgot to say them the first night, and nothing happened. 'N' then I didn't say them the next night, and nothing happened. 'N' so I decided I wouldn't ever say 'em again if nothing ever happened."
